RESEARCH INTERESTS

My research in industrial relations follows two lines of inquiry. First, I aim to understand different factors contributing to the decline of labor unions. Currently, I am investigating the impact of President Ronald Reagan's 1981 firing of striking air traffic controllers on union organizing in the United States. Second, I am interested in exploring strategies for labor union revitalization. I approach this topic from diverse perspectives, including analyzing how unions can strengthen their positions by leveraging strong legal institutions, fostering an inclusive labor movement, promoting rewarding collective experiences, and enhancing labor-management collaboration.
